What strikes me first about Goya is his solitude.

He is a solitary painter.

His true master, Velázquez, had lived two centuries earlier alongside other great painters: Murillo, Ribera, Zurbarán, El Greco of course, and above all Velázquez; and his descendants, whom he would never know but who would be named Manet and later Picasso...

JEAN-CLAUDE CARRIÈRE (1931 – 2021)

Goya, Carrière and the Ghost of Buñuel follows French writer and screenwriter Jean-Claude Carrière's (1931–2021) admiration for the Spanish painter Goya. Filmed by José-Luis López Linares, Carrière takes us on a journey through Spain, discovering the mysteries of a pictorial work that never ceases to fascinate him. A work whose secret lies in its ability to engage in a dialogue with other forms of expression, and to inspire numerous artists, including filmmaker Luis Buñuel, Carrière's great collaborator and friend. From the museums and chapels we visit, to the painter's native village, Goya's shadow looms over this film with such generosity that we, too, can't help but want to get to the bottom of the secret of this unparalleled work.
